THE PRINCE OF WALES'S FIRST OFFICIAL ACT: HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS AT PORTSMOUTH WITH PRESIDENT POINCARÉ, AFTER HE HAD GREETED FRANCE'S FIRST MAGISTRATE ON HIS ARRIVAL IN ENGLAND.

The fact that the Prince of Wales, as representative of his father, the King, received President Poincaré at Portsmouth on June 24 is exceptionally interesting for several reasons. First, because his Royal Highness, who was nineteen on the day before, thus performed his first official act as Heir to the Throne; secondly, because it must have brought back to him his very pleasant stay in France and his reception, from M. Fallières, of the Legion of Honour, which he wore at Portsmouth; thirdly, because, as an officer of the British Navy, he must have recalled what different kinds of meetings there were in the historic past between fighting-ships of the force to which he belongs and fighting-ships of that country from which M. Poincaré came as the British Empire's very honoured, very welcome, guest. His Royal Highness, who first met the President when he was staying in France, travelled with him to London, where King George himself awaited and received M. Poincaré.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

"JULIUS CÆSAR." AT HIS MAJESTY'S.

TO play "Julius Cæsar" during his Shakespeare Festival is always a safe card for Sir Herbert Tree, if only because his production of the Roman tragedy includes such an elaborate and realistic arrangement of the Forum Scene. Every member of the crowd which fills the stage at this point seems to be acting and to be interested in what is happening—right down to the humblest "super"; the shouts and groans, the interruptions of the speeches, and the indications of gradual change of mood are so artfully managed that a real effect of climax is secured at the culmination of Mark Antony's funeral address, even though it is treated by Sir Herbert far too much in the style of the modern mob-organ. The actor-manager's performance remains what it was, and secures all its old success. Brutus and Cassius are now represented by Mr. Basil Gill and Mr. Philip Merivale respectively, and the new Cassius is splendidly sonorous. There is hardly quite majesty enough in Mr. A. E. George's Julius Cæsar, perhaps, but his elocution is admirable; and Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry's Portia is stately, passionate and poetical—warmer-blooded than have been most Portias. To fill the part of Calpurnia, Sir Herbert has relied on the American actress, Miss Katharine Kaerdel, who impressed London playgoers as the vampire-woman in "A Fool There Was." She lends the character picturesqueness and emotional force, but her manner is ultra-modern and her diction is monotonous.

"JIM THE PENMAN" REVIVED AT THE COMEDY. This has been a season of revivals of old plays—"Diplomacy," "The Schoolmistress," and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" are all cases in point—and we had one more revival of this sort last week which bids fair to be the big success of the series. "Jim the Penman" must be twenty-five years old now, and there is a good deal that is ingenuous and primitive in its technique: who can help remarking, for instance, the author's persistent employment of the device of eavesdropping? The main idea, too, of this old-style melodrama of crime is hard to swallow: that a forger of international fame would be so rash as to concoct letters which are falsely credited to each party of an engaged couple is a hypothesis that puts too great a strain on our credulity. Thus the astute detective who makes discoveries by pretending to doze in corners, and the apparently prosperous hero who has to confess himself a criminal and to die after making atonement for his misdeeds, alike seem to us in this year of grace to be the creatures of a rather extravagant, not to say childish, fancy. On the other hand, the old play has a story that amuses and holds the attention; it has movement, it has telling situations and theatrical surprises. And so it happens that what pleased our fathers has still power to please their children. Especially as the piece is splendidly interpreted. Mr. Norman McKinnel's massive style is tremendously effective in the title-role; Miss Grace Lane harrows our feelings by the pathos which she puts into the wife's display of grief; Mr. Godfrey Tearle is chivalry incarnate; and Mr. Fisher White is appropriately melodramatic as a foreign villain; and, finally, Mr. Kenneth Douglas's detective has the right touch of humorous alertness, as bland in manner as he is ready in resource. Just the appropriate sort of acting, all of it!

"LE SECRET," AT THE NEW THEATRE.

An Iago in petticoats, a woman comfortably off, endowed with beauty and fortunately married to the best of husbands, who is nevertheless jealous of other people's happiness and takes a delight in wrecking their lives—such is Gabrielle Jannelot, the heroine of M. Henry Bernstein's new play, "Le Secret," which the Bouffes-Parisiens Company this week give Londoners a chance of witnessing. "Why, you are a monster," says Gabrielle's husband in horror when, in the last act, she makes full confession of her crimes; and her character is none the more easy to believe in when we find her loving her husband and capable of feeling a sense of sin. Her cruelty seems so objectless, save on the supposition that to some depraved sensibilities the mere spectacle of other folks' agony can afford pleasure; apparently, too, we are to credit Gabrielle with Iago's artistic satisfaction at watching the schemes of mischief he has planned work themselves out to an anticipated issue. She, at any rate, under the influence of her disease of malevolence, not only causes a breach between her husband and the sister he once loved, she ruins her dearest woman-friend's chances with one man, and only just fails of spoiling this Henriette's relations with the lover who has married her, knowing nothing of her past. Truly, an unconceivable mass of wickedness, this Gabrielle; yet out of her tricks and frenzies M. Bernstein has constructed a drama which is a masterpiece of stage-craft, and is "frightfully thrilling." You may find it verbose, superficial, inconclusive, theatrical, insincere, but you cannot deny its sensational power or remain irresponsible to its scenes of excitement and its appeals to the nerves. Mme. Simone is just the actress now to suggest the brain-storms of the seductive little fiend, Gabrielle; she has improved out of all knowledge since she last visited London. And she has splendid support—from M. Claude Garry, as the genial but masterful husband, in particular.

THOMAS GIRTIN'S "THE WHITE HOUSE" AT CHELSEA.

WITH reference to the coloured illustration published in our issue of June 21, under the head-line, "Acknowledged by Turner to be Better Than Works of His Own: Thomas Girtin's Masterpiece," and the sub-title: "By the Man of Whom Turner said: 'Had Tom Girtin Lived I Should Have Starved': 'The White House at Chelsea'; Known also as 'The White House, Chelsea Reach' and 'Battersea Reach,'" we have received a letter in which Mr. E. Montefiore Micholls says: "I observe that in the reproduction of 'The White House at Chelsea' in your issue of Saturday last, you head it with the statement: 'Acknowledged by Turner to be better than works of his own: Thomas Girtin's masterpiece,' reproduced by permission of Thomas Agnew and Son, and below connect it with the well-known story of Turner and the dealer. From correspondence which appeared in the Times and other papers at the time of Messrs. Agnew's exhibition in the spring of last year, it was clearly proved, as you are aware, that the drawing then shown was not the authentic one to which the story attaches, and that it was inferior to the one then and now in my possession." Mr. Montefiore Micholls also tells us that his picture bears both signature and date. It may be further added that when the question was raised at the period mentioned above, Sir Frederick Wedmore wrote to the Times as follows: "The water-colour at Messrs. Agnew's—which I have not seen before—may be Girtin's, and admirable, but it is certainly not the drawing which, among connoisseurs of Girtin, has long had the character of being that 'White House at Chelsea' that—as I relate, I think, in a book of my youth ('Studies in English Art')—Turner at a certain date preferred to any drawing of his own. It is Mr. Micholls' possession that has enjoyed hitherto, and must continue to enjoy, that reputation. It is his which, in an exhibition of the work of Girtin at the Burlington Fine Arts Club, in 1875, was the catalogued drawing. Here it well held its own, even in contact with the possessions of that exact and difficult dilettante, the late Mr. Sackville Bole. But I remember that there came into the exhibition-room at a later hour—indulged, not catalogued—another rendering of the theme. This belonged to the then aged Mr. W. Bell Scott—an associate of Rossetti—a worthy man, to whom we owe indifferent works of painting and one agreeable little book upon the German 'Little Masters.' Now, is the drawing in the Agnew Gallery that which belonged to Scott? If not, there must be two drawings, somewhere about the world, setting up, with what success they can, rivalry with Mr. Micholls' possession."

PARLIAMENT.

WHILE taking note of the "expressions of regret" by Sir Rufus Isaacs and Mr. Lloyd George for making purchases of American Marconi shares and not mentioning them in the debate last October, the House of Commons has, by a majority of 78, refused to pass upon the Ministers its formal censure. An attempt was made to arrive at a form of words on which all sections would agree, but although the Unionists were willing to join in reprobating the charges of corruption which had been brought against Ministers and had been disproved, the Government would not ask the House to vote any censure for the admitted mistakes; and accordingly there was a Party division which has left a feeling of some dissatisfaction. There was an electioneering ring in the debate on Monday on the resolution dispensing with a Committee stage on the three Bills which are being proceeded with under the Parliament Act. The resolution was denounced in an amendment moved by Mr. Austen Chamberlain as a gross infringement of the ancient prerogatives and liberties of the House of Commons, and the debate proved exceptionally fine and lively, with some of the brilliant characteristics of the controversies of a generation ago. Mr. Chamberlain excelled himself by a speech which was full of force, and was in the best Parliamentary style; and Mr. Churchill delivered an incisive, pugnacious reply. There ran through the debate a general consciousness that the Unionists might soon be on the Government benches. The Prime Minister himself, referring to the procedure which Liberals might adopt in opposition, and meeting a cry of "Soon" from Unionists, remarked at first that he did not care whether it was soon or late. This remark he withdrew, but in a carefully substituted phrase he said he would not be sorry if "within a measurable distance" they had an opportunity of showing what they could do in opposition. By this statement he conveyed an idea of weariness of office.

M. POINCARÉ WELCOMED BY THE KING.

President Poincaré, who was accompanied from Portsmouth by the Prince of Wales, was received at Victoria Station by the King; and amongst those present also were the Duke of Connaught and Prince Arthur; Prince Louis of Battenberg, the First Sea Lord; Lord Crewe, Lord Lieutenant of the County of London; Mr. Asquith; Sir Edward Grey; Mr. McKenna; Sir Francis Bertie, the British Ambassador in Paris; Field-Marshal Sir John French; Lord Granard, Master of the Horse; and Sir Edward Henry, Commissioner of Police. The "Marseillaise" was played as

M. Poincaré alighted from the train, to be greeted by the King, who shook hands with him and conversed with him for some moments before presenting him to the Duke of Connaught and Prince Arthur. The Guard of Honour was then inspected; and after this came various presentations. In the drawing, there are seen, from left to right, the Prince of Wales; M. Pichon, French Minister for Foreign Affairs; M. Cambon, French Ambassador to this country (in the railway carriage); M. Poincaré; and the King.

PASSING LONDON'S ONLY QUADRIGA—ON THE CONSTITUTION HILL ARCH: PRESIDENT POINCARÉ DRIVING FROM VICTORIA STATION TO ST. JAMES'S PALACE, WITH THE KING.

After the preliminary ceremonial at Victoria Station, President Poincaré was conducted to the State carriage by the Master of the Horse and took his seat on the King's right. In the second carriage were the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught (who was on his Royal Highness's left), and Prince Arthur. The escort was provided by the 1st Life Guards.

Throughout the whole drive from Victoria, by way of Grosvenor Gardens, Hyde Park Corner, Piccadilly, and St. James's Street, to St. James's Palace, the President was extremely well received, welcomed in a manner, indeed, which suggested the "Tutoyons-Nous"—the "Let us 'thou' one another"—on banners of welcome in the decorations in the City.

BRITAIN'S SALUTE TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC: THE NAVAL WELCOME AT SPITHEAD.

DRAWN BY CECIL KING, OUR SPECIAL ARTIST AT PORTSMOUTH.

AS THE FRENCH SHIPS DROPPED ANCHOR: THE "COURBET," WITH PRESIDENT POINCARÉ ABOARD, ON HER ARRIVAL.

M. Poincaré made the voyage from Cherbourg in the Dreadnought "Courbet." So soon as salutes had been given and had been returned by Southsea Castle and the shore batteries, the French Squadron, picking up their positions, dropped anchor; then the British Fleet saluted, their bands playing the "Marseillaise." In another moment or two, the flag officers of the assembled British Fleet had started in their boats to pay their respects to the Nation's guest. After this, the Port Admiral's barge went alongside the "Courbet"; the President boarded her, and was conveyed to the "Fire Queen." In this he proceeded into Portsmouth Harbour. It may be noted that the "Courbet," the first real Dreadnought finished in France, is the first of four all-big-gun ships to be passed into her country's service. Her guns are all 12-inch; and she mounts twelve of them, set in six turrets. She can bring ten to bear on either broadside, and can fire ahead or astern with eight. In the drawing (from left to right) are the "Neptune," the "Fire Queen," the "Courbet," the "Gloire," and the "King George V," the most powerful and latest-commissioned of British Super-Dreadnoughts.

One of the most distinguished medical men of our day died this week in the person of Sir Jonathan Hutchinson, LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.S., at the age of eighty-four. His researches into the origin of leprosy gave him a world-wide reputation. He termed the disease "fish-eater's tuberculosis," and advanced the theory that it came into Europe with "the observance of fish fasts, and disappeared when Protestantism threw these fasts into disuse"—a contention that brought him into conflict with the Roman Catholic Church. Ophthalmia was another disease which he studied, and it was mainly due to him that the once-universal scourge of the Potteries was practically eradicated. He was knighted in 1908.

Rear-Admiral George E. Patey, M.V.O., has just hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief of the Royal Australian Navy, and will at an early date proceed to the Pacific. Mr. Lister Drummond, K.C., has been appointed a Metropolitan magistrate on Sir John Dickinson's transfer to Bow Street in the place of the late Sir Henry Curtis Bennett. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1879, and practised on the South-Eastern Circuit.

Mr. Edward M. Synge, who died at Byfleet at the age of fifty-three, only began his artistic career twelve years ago. A land agent in earlier life, the death of his father in 1901 gave him the opportunity of developing his artistic bent. He travelled and studied on the Continent, executing between twenty and thirty plates a year, his work meeting with ever-increasing success.

THE CITY'S HONOUR TO THE NATION'S GUEST: THE PRESENTATION OF THE ADDRESS TO PRESIDENT POINCARÉ IN THE LIBRARY OF THE GUILDHALL.

Following its usual hospitable methods, the City of London welcomed M. Poincaré on Wednesday, June 25, presenting an Address to him, and entertaining him to a "déjeuner" in the Great Hall of the Guildhall. The President made quite a triumphal progress to, and through and from, the City. At the junction of Tottenham Court Road and Oxford Street, he received Addresses from the boroughs of Marylebone and Holborn. The City's Address, which was read and presented, in the library of the Guildhall, at a Court of Common Council, was handed to M. Poincaré in a gold casket. With regard to the second photograph, it may be pointed out that M. Poincaré is seen (rather hidden) on the right hand of the Lord Mayor. On the right of the photograph may be seen the Duke of Connaught and Prince Arthur.

The International Horse Show at Olympia, which, it need hardly be said nowadays, has become one of the recognised functions of the season, opened the other day, and at the moment of writing is pursuing a most successful career. The preparation of the great building called, as usual, for considerable thought and lavish expenditure. It is on record, for example, that the decorative scheme cost £10,000 and necessitated the provision of, amongst other things, 50,000 artificial roses, 20,000 square yards of material for the "blue-sky" roof, 1000 silver maples, 350 specimen bay-trees, hundreds of ferns, some 30,000 plants, and 24,000 square feet of turf. It was arranged that President Poincaré's visit to the Show should take place on Thursday last, June 26. A feature of the events is the number of foreign officers who are competing. These include twenty-one French officers (together with twelve officers from the School of Cavalry at Saumur, for riding display only); two German officers; six Russian officers; eight Belgians; four Swedes; a Norwegian; six Italians; and four officers from Holland. Seven Canadian officers are taking part.

The Fringe of the East."

Some five years ago, Mr. H. C. Lukach returned from a journey in the Near East, having visited Levantine monasteries, the Holy Land, and the fascinating country between Aleppo and the Euphrates. A book was, of course, inevitable, but it is hard to account for the delay in publishing "The Fringe of the East" (Macmillan), unless Mr. Lukach has taken too literally the familiar statement that the country is "unchanging." He acknowledges now, rather ruefully, that the East has upset the old-time theory of travellers, and that it has spent most of the years since his return in changing everything it had to change. Even the railroad has not hesitated to intrude upon the bridle-tracks and rough roads that he travelled in moderate discomfort. But progress will not wait upon travellers' convenience in these days; it pushes on, intent upon making the desert blossom like a rose, if not with flowers, then with dividends, and Mr. Lukach may consider himself fortunate inasmuch as his narrative remains pleasantly readable. It is greatly helped by a series of photographs, selected with judgment and taken with skill. His account of Mount Athos and its religious establishments is of special interest at a time when the district may possibly become a buffer State in the interest of permanent peace between the Allies. In Nabulus, the ancient Shechem, the priests showed Mr. Lukach the Scroll of the Law that they keep for favoured Tarpon - Fishing. Mr. Dimock has larger claim to write "The Book of the Tarpon" (Frank Palmer) than the circumstance that he believes himself to be the first to take the great fish on rod and line. That was in 1882, before the tarpon had won recognition as a game-fish; and since then the author has taken it with all sorts of lawful tackle; and also with the harpoon. Of the last method he writes that "it is several games rolled into one"; of its sporting character there can be no doubt after reading his account; and we are only debarred from full assent to its sporting legality by the fact that it must be necessary frequently to kill the quarry, and that is averse from the ethics of tarpon-fishing. For be it known that tarpon-fishing differs from all other angling in that the unwritten laws of the sport prescribe the death of your first capture, and of none other. The fish is not good to eat; it furnishes no trophy, unless it be the horny eye-covering or scales the bigness of an oyster-shell; and when it has been brought alongside boat or canoe—inboard by the scrupulous or indifferent to wet and slime—and freed from the hook, the tarpon receives its strangers, and he not only accepted it as the genuine article—that is, the oldest codex of the Pentateuch—but has published a photograph, together with a lengthy description. He may console himself with the thought that he is only one among the many who have been taken in by the astute Samaritans. Perhaps the special interest attaching to Mr. Lukach's journey begins with the arrival at Homs and ends when Tell Ahmar was reached, for the country lying between these two points is now coming rapidly into the arena of commercial enterprise. It is enormously wealthy, and powerful European influences are at work to divert that wealth in different directions. Since the author travelled through the land great changes have taken place, and before many years have passed we shall be able to turn to his discharge to furnish excitement in ratio with its size to whomsoever next may lure it. For strength and gameness there is no fish to equal the tarpon, and its leaping habit, indulged at any stage of the fight when it feels the hook, lends the sport a distinction which is not without danger to the frail craft of the fisherman. Mr. Dimock writes brightly, and infects the reader with his own enthusiasm; withal he conveys a great deal of information with regard to resorts, seasons, guides, and methods, which renders his work of really practical use to the man who would taste of the joys of this, the sport of Florida. The numerous photographs form a very attractive feature of a readable book. "No available sport," says Mr. Dimock in conclusion, "offers greater legitimate excitement than tarpon-fishing."

FISHING UNDER AN EMPEROR'S PALACE FOR FOOD FOR HIS TABLE.

A RECONSTRUCTION BY A. FORESTIER.

AS IT WAS IN NERO'S HOME ON THE PALATINE: NETTING SEA FISH—THE ONLY KIND EATEN BY PATRICIANS—
IN A SUBTERRANEAN FISH-TANK BY THE SIDE OF THE TRICLINIUM.

Commendatore Boni described the other day, in a most interesting lecture at King's College, London, recent discoveries made during his excavations on the Palatine, some of which were illustrated in our issue of May 31. With regard to this reconstruction, which he made from memory of one of the lantern-slides shown, Mr. Forestier writes: "In Nero's Palace there were found, by the side of the triclinium (or dining-room), five well-preserved subterranean rooms, carefully plastered and cemented, vaulted, and in communication with each other. These were the piscinae, or fish-tanks, in which sea-fish were kept alive in water brought from the sea by means at present not definitely ascertained. It is well to state that the fresh-water fish was food only for the plebeians; the patrician families, and, naturally, the Emperors, ate only sea fish, numerous varieties of which were kept in plenty to meet the demand of the imperial table. The drawing represents one of the piscinae. The piscinae are at present, of course, dry. But to render an idea of their practical purpose, fishermen are shown in the act of netting the fish, while an attendant of the kitchen is waiting for the catch to be completed. Light was admitted from the top of the vault. In the present tank a double flight of steps was used to reach the bottom for cleansing or repairing.

BY ONE WHO "ORCHESTRATES" COLOUR AND IS MASTER OF A WORDLESS REGION: "THE DECORATIVE ART OF LEON BAKST."

REPRODUCTIONS FROM "THE DECORATIVE ART OF LÉON BAKST," BY COURTESY OF THE FINE ART SOCIETY, OF NEW BOND STREET, PUBLISHERS OF THE BOOK.

A very short time ago, comparatively speaking, Léon Bakst was a name unknown to the average Englishman. Then the Russian Ballet came to London, not only with its great dancers, but with scenery and costumes which, in their well-ordered riot of primitive colours, their ingenious Orientalism, and their general air of being precisely the right thing, captivated the more artistic, precisely as Nijinsky, Karsavina, and the others have captivated them. There can be few, in consequence, who are not familiar now with Bakst and his work. The recognition of him was, it must be said, perhaps to our discredit, first on the Continent, as alas! it nearly always is. Born in St. Petersburg in 1868, the man now hailed as a master decorator, particularly for the stage, studied at the School of Fine Arts in his native city. The official air of this institution was too redolent of red tape for him; and, cutting himself free from the trammels, he went to Paris in 1895, there to be a pupil of Edelfelt for three years. Commissions were a sequel to this; but it was not until 1906 that he really gained that credit which was his due. In that year, he was responsible for the decorations, and arranged a "bosquet" for the Exhibition of Russian Art. That put the stamp of reality upon his reputation, and it was made very evident that he should turn his attention to the stage. This he did. St. Petersburg gave him his opportunity, asking him to paint the scenery for "Oedipus at Colonus," and for "Hippolytus" for the Imperial Theatre. The older critics, of course, became rampant; but there were many who did not see eye-to-eye with them and were justified of their opinion, as is proved by the legitimate vogue of the artist. For that reason, and for the reason that more of his work will be seen during the present Russian Opera and Ballet season at Drury Lane, no better period than the moment could have been chosen for the publication, by the Fine Arts Society, of New Bond Street, of the superbly produced "Decorative Art of Léon Bakst"; with an appreciation by Arsène Alexandre, and Notes on the Ballets by Jean Cocteau. The volume, with its perfectly presented plates in colours and gold, is one which cannot fail to rejoice all admirers of the designer's work, and we know that these are becoming legion. Bakst's appeal is many-sided. This the writer of the Appreciation fully realises. In substantiation of the statement, we may quote a few lines: "The wonderful series of stage-settings that Léon Bakst has given to the world owe a great deal of their fascination to the strange blending of rich and sensuous beauty with a note of something sinister—almost menacing. From the first he was acclaimed a master of the harmony of line and colour in movement; that is one of his great secrets, and with each successive production his work has been more clearly recognised as an essential factor in, and an integral complement of, the enchanting inventions of the poets and musicians with whom he has worked." Again: "There are regions where words seem never to have lived regions, in truth, where they could not live. These are the realms of sound, the Kingdoms of Melody and Harmony. . . . Strangely enough, music, like poetry, also calls up before our eyes forms that move swiftly and colours that scintillate even more rapidly." There Léon Bakst reigns. He sees the colours of music. "He realises an orchestration' of colour in unison with the true colour of music." Further: "Bakst knows how to clothe his figures, Historical, Mythical, or Tragic, in 'danceable' dresses. . . . His costumes seem to be the natural garment—the logical envelope, so to speak—of the figures that the painter has been at pains to understand and bring to life." For the rest, we have but space to say, as, indeed, we have already said, that this beautifully turned-out book on the Art of Léon Bakst is one which none who would be in the movement can afford to neglect.

SCIENCE AND NATURAL HISTORY

SCIENCE JOTTINGS.

THE DANGERS OF DYSPEPSIA

NONE of the lesser ills of life are treated by the ordinary man with less attention than troubles of digestion. "Only a little indigestion" is the phrase with which doctor and patient alike are wont to greet the appearance of its constantly recurring symptoms. Yet it would be difficult to find any which ought to be more carefully watched, or which are more frequent forerunners of serious maladies. Dyspepsia or painful digestion is, as Dr. Héricourt has shown in his instructive work "Les Frontières de la Maladie," a sign in children of a predisposition to gout and rheumatism; in adults it is often the cause of appendicitis, and in old age it leads directly to hardening of the arteries. Moreover, there can be little doubt that it is on the increase. The rush and strain of modern life, the substitution of sedentary work for the out-of-door occupations in which our forefathers for the most part passed their lives, the great increase of reading and writing with their consequent eye-strain, all go to make dyspepsia more common in this generation than the last. Even if it did not have any of the worst effects attributed to it by Dr. Héricourt, it would be worth while to fight resolutely against it, were it only for the widespread misery it causes, and the way it poisons all the pleasures of living.

Whatever part may be played in its establishment by heredity or occupation, the immediate cause of dyspepsia is not difficult to trace. Probably by reason of the chronic or temporary failure of the nerves which regulate such matters, the acid of the gastric juice is secreted in excess. Hence that part of the food which is taken in the form of flesh is too rapidly digested, and passes into the intestine overcharged with acid. But the digestion which takes place within the intestine itself demands an alkaline medium, and the presence there of an excess of acid leads to the food which is of the fatty and farinaceous kinds remaining unaltered. Moreover, the glands secreting the gastric juice become in time exhausted by the

This creature, which lives in complete darkness in the subterranean waters of caves in the mountains to the east of the Adriatic, is blind; in fact, has only rudimentary eyes, which are hidden beneath its skin. extra work laid upon them, and to the stage of "acidity" succeeds one in which an amount of acid insufficient to digest meat is supplied to the stomach. Then follows the arrival in the intestine of undigested original malady. If these be neglected, as they too often are, the patient is in a fair way towards that appendicitis which is brought about by the attack of septic and pyogenic, or pus-forming, microbes upon the gland of the appendix. When this is allowed to develop, no certain means of cure seems to remain but the surgical removal of the gland itself.

The successful treatment of the earlier symptoms, however, should, according to most writers, be directed to the removal of their cause. What seems to be the best opinion of the present day declares this to be always fatigue, and in most cases fatigue of the nerves. Hence everything which can increase the power of the nerves to resist strain is, as doctors say, indicated. Out-of-door recreation, cold baths, and the avoidance of overcrowded and overheated rooms are, especially for the young, the most valuable methods of attaining this end. Hence the periodical visit to the seaside or to other health resorts which has become a national institution is dictated by a sound instinct. Yet we should not forget that Nature's own way of repairing the disorder of any function or organ is repose, and this may often be practised when others are out of the question. Dr. Héricourt asserts that he has often seen the premonitory symptoms of appendicitis entirely disappear after a fast of from eight to ten days. During that time, he says, the patient should be confined to bed, so as to make as little demand on the organism as possible, and allowed to eat or drink nothing but mineral water to assist in the purification of the blood. This will seem to many a heroic remedy and one not to be undertaken lightly. Others are the periodical use of purgatives, to which the medical profession seems to be slowly returning, the careful regulation of diet, and an increase of the time devoted to sleep. In all of them—even in the last-named—lurk dangers unsuspected by the layman, and none should be adopted without competent medical advice when obtainable. The great fact to be borne in mind can be summed up in the sentence, "Never neglect a long-continued or recurring indigestion."—F. L.

THE MOVING-STAIRCASE PRINCIPLE APPLIED TO A LOCK: BOATS BEING CARRIED BY THE ELECTRIC CONVEYER, AT BOULTER'S, WHICH WORKS ON ENDLESS CHAINS.

Ascot Sunday was accompanied by brilliant weather this year, and, as a natural result, the Thames was gay with river-men and river-girls. Nowhere, of course, was the scene more animated—or, to use a "cliché," more kaleidoscopic—than at Boulter's Lock. There a great crowd, on the bank and on the new bridge, watched the coming and going of the boats. At times, needless to say, there was some little congestion; but traffic is dealt with with much greater rapidity than it was in the past, and there was never serious delay. The chief cause of this is the new electric conveyer, working on endless chains; on which craft are borne to the upper or lower water in remarkably little time. The whole operation, indeed, only takes three-quarters of a minute. Passengers remain in the boats. Over 1600 boats went through the lock during the day—a record.

MUSIC.

AS far as this season is concerned, Covent Garden will probably hear the last of Caruso to-night (June 28). The great tenor may not be all he was, but he was never so popular in the days when his voice was yet more remarkable than it is, and, as was remarked a week or two ago, he has supplemented his power to hold the house by giving more attention to method than was necessary in the old days. Then the sheer volume and tone sufficed. He is not the Caruso of half-a-dozen years ago, but he remains easily first among the ever-windmilling company of great tenors. In "La Bohème" and "Aida" he has been heard at his best.

The revival of "Faust" was rather a disappointment. With the exception of M. Franz, who had sung in "Louise" on the previous night, nobody approached the first class. Even Melba, to whom every note of the opera is familiar, could not recall her own achievements as Marguerite. M. Gilly was a somewhat disappointing Valentine, and seemed, for some reason, a little "fluffy" in his part; the new Siebel is hardly more than adequate, and there was a strange lack of animation among the principals, which contrasted oddly with the vigour and enthusiasm of orchestra and chorus. One might have been pardoned for thinking that Gounod's opera was making little or no appeal to those most concerned. There was a well-filled house, and applause was not lacking, but it was one of the nights when the current of good intentions turns awry.

The appearance of Paderewski at the Queen's Hall with the London Symphony Orchestra, under Nikisch, was quite sufficient not only to draw a full house, but to provoke acute controversy. For some, his playing of the "Emperor" Concerto was a delight, for others, it was a test of endurance. There were those who listened enraptured; there were those

PLAYHOUSES.

"THE GILDED PILL" AT THE GLOBE.

IF he has done nothing else, Mr. Storer Clouston has done one thing in his new piece, "The Gilded Pill," to earn playgoers' gratitude. He has fitted that popular favourite, Mr. Rutland Barrington, with a part which evokes memories of many of the actor's most agreeable performances, and exploits very happily his genial and humorous personality. The pink-faced, grey-headed, hearty and somewhat uneducated pill-inventor, confronted with a family of snobs whom he has to disabuse as to their origins, constitutes the play, and the whole of the play; and it would be easy, did not Mr. Barrington make us forget all such accidents, to point out that so amiable a soul as Robert Denison proves himself was hardly likely to have attained a great success in business. But at the Globe once more, just as in the days of "Patience" and "The Mikado," the old Savoyard hypnotises us and we are content.

"BUNTY" REAPPEARS.

"Bunty" has returned to town, this time taking up her quarters not at the Haymarket, but again at the Playhouse. Here the managing little heroine of Mr. Moffat's play was once more received with open arms last Monday night. The harmony which gave such pleasure at the Haymarket has not been disturbed in the Playhouse revival. Miss Kate Moffat is at hand with her air of good-humour and her coaxing ways to give us the only conceivable reading of Bunty, and she has with her as Weelum Sprunt, the colleague equally indispensable—to wit, Mr. Watson Hume. These, and Miss Jean Turnbull as the old maid, resume their former rôles. The only important change is that which substitutes, in place of the author, Mr. W. R. Morand as stern old Tammas; but no hole can be picked in his performance, or, indeed, in those of the other newcomers.

who felt that even Paderewski's position and accomplishment could not justify the reading. Certainly the effort was a great one. Of the "Eroica" Symphony and "Egmont" Overture that completed the evening's programme, there is no need to say more than that Nikisch seemed to find fresher beauties in both.

Mr. Mlynarski is giving, at Queen's Hall, a short series of concerts devoted to Slavonic music, and the first programme was made up of the work of Polish composers. The London Symphony Orchestra gave the programme a capable rendering, though more rehearsal would not have been superfluous; and Mr. Paul Kochanski was heard to advantage in the solo part of a violin concerto by Karłowicz, which is a fairly formal and conventional composition, full of a certain superficial beauty, but nowhere marked by any deep feeling or exalted ideas. The conductor's own symphony was, perhaps, the best piece of music given at the opening concert.

At the Æolian Hall last week, Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a remarkable recital. He was heard at his best in some eighteenth-century music, the Mozart and Scarlatti being played with exquisite appreciation. The arrangements for the piano of a Debussy nocturne and the "Après-midi d'un Faune" were, in their way, a revelation.

MAKING RUSSIAN DANCERS: IN THE IMPERIAL SCHOOL, ST. PETERSBURG.

Each year about a hundred and twenty nine-year-old boys and girls, including children of ballet-dancers, and often children of stage-hands, present themselves at the Ballet Department of the Imperial Theatre School in St. Petersburg. As there are only from fifteen to eighteen vacancies annually, a selection must be made. The youngsters are medically examined, and a proportion of them are rejected. Those who pass this test are brought before a Commission of dancers and ballet-masters, who put them through a most thorough examination, watching critically every movement and every physical perfection or fault.

The members of the Commission note those they consider to be the best, and on their collective opinion depends the choice of somewhat over eighteen of the children, who are accepted provisionally. All the newcomers are then on trial for a year. At the end of that time those not considered good enough are dismissed. During this period the girls wear, except when dancing, the brown dress and black apron which are the uniform of all school-girls in Russia. The boys wear no special clothes to mark their position. Each girl, when she has been accepted finally, receives a beautiful cornflower-blue uniform

For the dancing lessons she wears the short ballet-skirt, not of gauze, but of light grey-green cotton, with tights of the same colour, or of greyish olive-green. The more talented of the pupils find themselves, in due course, in a higher class, and then wear pink ballet-skirts as marks of distinction. The highest sign of all is the white muslin ballet-skirt. The boarding school for these dancers of the future holds 48 girls and 34 boys. In addition, some 25 girl pupils and 20 boys live at home. The girls and the boys are taught their dancing apart, but are together in the school for other lessons. The pupils are awakened at eight o'clock in the morning. At mid-day they are taken for a walk. The mornings are devoted to the learning of languages, a little geography, history and arithmetic. Fencing and miming are taught also. Further, the boys have to learn how to hold the girls while they are posing and twirling during their dancing, an exceedingly difficult art. The work of dancing is indeed, and obviously, very hard; none substantiate this statement more certainly than the great dancers. Only the other day, for instance, Mme. Anna Pavlova, talking to the "Daily Chronicle," said: "To dance for a living, is it good—for the health—for the woman? . . . It is splendid; but it is a life of hardship—of renunciation. We who dance must be prepared to sacrifice all other things to our art . . . give to the dancing all our thoughts and all our energies. Dancing is quite unlike every other form of art. There are arts at which one works hard—then success comes and one can work less hard. But it is not so with dancing. Here the more one progresses the harder it is necessary to work. . . . To-day I work harder at my art than ever before. One must practise everlastingly in order to make progress, and when progress comes one must still practise—practise—practise! There is no stopping-place—the life of a dancer is a life of continual hard work from beginning to end. . . . With those who dance as a hobby it is not as with those who dance for a living. The latter must have the spirit of dancing in their blood, Promotion comes to a dancer only as a result of worth and work." After promotion comes the reward—fame; and Mme. Pavlova herself personifies European, if not world-wide fame.

AN EXPERIENCE PRINCE ALBERT HAS UNDERGONE: THE "THRILL" OF THE FALLS.

DRAWN BY CYRUS CUNEO, R.O.I.

ON ONE OF THE BRIDGES WHICH ARE CRUSHED INTO MATCHWOOD EACH YEAR: PASSING BEHIND NIAGARA FALLS AND THE CAVE OF THE WINDS.

Only the other day it was set on record that Prince Albert, the second son of the King and Queen, who is cruising aboard the "Cumberland" with other naval cadets, had visited Niagara Falls and the Cave of the Winds. Like all other visitors he had to wear a special oilskin suit. Describing such an experience, Mr. Cyrus Cuneo calls it one of the most thrilling one would care to encounter. Sending us this drawing he writes: "Those taking the trip are obliged to denude themselves of all their clothes and to don a suit of flannels, and over that an oilskin suit securely fastened, and with a hood fitting tightly around the head, leaving only the face exposed. Roughly shaped shoes of canvas are tied on; and you are ready. You then descend a spiral staircase to the foot of the Falls, and pass along a specially erected bridge, or gangway, through the Rock of Ages, around and directly beneath the mass of falling water. As you walk to the Rock of Ages, you are greeted by a terrible splash of water, which the guide assures you is nothing but the wind driving the spray across.

You then proceed across and down under the fall, when, without the slightest warning, you are struck with long ropes of heavy water, and the most terrific wind you have ever encountered; the breath is almost battered out of your body. The party generally join hands and grip the slippery rail for dear life, and go blindly on trying to keep themselves from being smothered or blown off their feet. You struggle slowly across the cave (150 feet) step by step, half-blinded and encircled by the mass of whirling spray until you emerge and ascend some steps into absolute calm. It is a somewhat terrifying, but at the same time a most invigorating sensation, and in the words of an American who was one of our party, and expressed the sentiments of all: 'I wouldn't have missed it for a hundred dollars.' The bridges you traverse have to be reconstructed every year, as the spray from the Falls is frozen into a solid mass in the winter; and in the spring, when the ice melts and caves, these bridges are crushed and battered into matchwood."

Immediately after the death of Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate, it was asked whether or no the time had come for the abandonment of the office. Various people have been suggested as possible Poets

In the space at our disposal we can, of course, mention but one or two of the works of each; more than that, indeed, is not necessary. Verses," and various poems in periodicals, including Lines on the Death of Swinburne. Mrs. (Alice) Meynell, the only woman suggested for the post, is known chiefly by her "Preludes" and her "Later Poems." Mr. Austin Dobson has written "Vignettes in Rhyme," "Proverbs in Porcelain," "Old World Idylls," and "At the Sign of the Lyre." Mr. Alfred Noyes, one of the youngest of known poets—he was born in September 1880—has published much poetry, notably "The Enchanted Island and other Poems." Mr. Rudyard Kipling's works need not be quoted; they are well known to everyone for their virility and, many of them, for their Imperialism.

Mr. Henry Newbolt published "Poems New and Old" last year, and is known by various other works, including "Songs of Memory and Hope," "Songs of the Sea," and "Songs of the Fleet." Mr. Robert Bridges has written various plays and poems. Mr. William Watson has written much, including "Odes and other Poems," "The Purple East," "The Hope of the World," "An Ode on the Coronation of King Edward VII.," "For England," and "The Heralds of the Dawn." Mr. John Masefield, the most "modern" of all those suggested, is familiar as the writer of such works as "The Everlasting Mercy," "The Daffodil Fields," and "Dauber."

PHOTOGRAPH BY GRANDE.

THE LINE WHICH CALLED FOR SEVERAL FEATS HITHERTO UNRECORDED IN ENGINEERING: A BRIDGE SPANNING A MOUNTAIN TORRENT ON THE LOETSCHBERG RAILWAY.

ON THE NEW LINE WHICH, IT IS CLAIMED, DESERVES A SUFFICIENT TRAFFIC SOLELY FROM THE ENGINEERS OF EUROPE! A NATURAL GORGE ON THE LOETSCHBERG RAILWAY.

A few days ago two hundred Swiss Deputies, in two trains drawn by the greatest electric engines ever built, passed, in fourteen minutes through the ten-mile Loetschberg Tunnel on the new line joining Berne to the Simplon. The opening of this railway to regular traffic has been fixed for July 1. As it was put recently in the "Daily Mail": "The Loetschberg Railway . . . accomplishes not one or two feats unrecorded in engineering; and it is a question if fifty miles of country ever needed so much energy to conquer. . . . It deserves a sufficient traffic solely from the engineers of Europe. . . . The outrageous gradients—and these are reduced to the minimum by gyrations and tunnels that would do credit to a boa-constrictor—are surmounted by electric engines of 2000 horse-power. . . . From Berne or Interlaken you can now spend the inside of a day at the Italian lakes—if you are very energetic. The way to Italy will be shortened for Eastern France and Western Germany, and English people have a plethora of alternatives." The route is most picturesque, as well as a wonder of engineering.

IN THE PRINCIPALITY OF THE KING'S SON: NORTH WALES FOR HOLIDAYS.

NORTH WALES has pre-eminent attractions for holiday-makers of every type. Its natural beauty is unsurpassed in these islands; it is exceptionally rich in historic interest; and it offers abundant opportunities for sport and recreation. The artist, the antiquary, the naturalist, and the sportsman alike find in North Wales all that their hearts desire, while those who, on their holidays, merely want the amusements of the beach, the pier, and the promenade, are amply catered for in the larger coast towns. It is an ideal country for walking and climbing, with its lovely valleys, its noble mountains, and its rocky streams and waterfalls; while those to whom the glamour of the past appeals discover a never-failing source of interest in the many grand old feudal castles. Chief among them is Carnarvon, where the Investiture of the Prince of Wales took place last year; but there are numerous others, including those of Conway, Harlech, Ruthin, Rhuddlan, and Beaumaris.

Outdoor sports can be enjoyed to perfection, especially mountaineering, motoring, golf, bathing, and boating. North Wales is, above all, a climber's country, and it offers climbs of every description, from gentle ascents possible to any pedestrian, to difficult rock-climbs that tax the powers of the most experienced Alpinist. The chief range in this district is, of course, that of Snowdon, where it is always advisable to take a guide unless the climber knows the way well and has a practical knowledge of mountaineering. There are many other considerable hills to be reached from various points, such as Bethesda, Aber, Dolwyddelan, Blaenau-Festiniog, Bedd-Geleert, and Capel Curig. The chief centre for Snowdon is Llanberis. For those unable to reach the summit on foot, there is the mountain railway. Excellent facilities for seeing the beauties of North Wales are provided by the L. and N.W.R. holiday contract tickets, covering various round tours. The observation-cars attached to the trains are a very attractive novelty.

It would be impossible, in the space here available, to describe all the attractive resorts on the North Wales coast. They vary from the larger towns, such as Llandudno, Colwyn Bay, and Rhyl, with all a town's entertainments in the way of music, and otherwise, down to quiet little seaside villages, where the lovers of Nature may revel in her charms far from the madding crowd. Of the bigger places, perhaps the most popular of all is Llandudno, of which some illustrations are given on this page. It lies on a crescent-shaped bay between the two great headlands—the Great Orme's Head and the Little Orme's Head, and its promenade extends for nearly two miles. There are fine, firm sands which make a first-rate playground for the little ones, and bathing from vans on the beach is safe at all states of the tide. The pier is about half-a-mile long. During the season concerts are given at the Pier Head every morning, and each evening an excellent band performs in the pavilion at the pier-entrance. Other entertainments are given in the Bijou Theatre and the Pier Exhibition, and in the great natural amphitheatre known as the Happy Valley. The Great Orme, with its famous Marine Drive—five miles long—is itself one of the chief attractions of Llandudno.

ART NOTES.

TWO works by Franz Hals cropped up in the sale-rooms last week. One of these, the portrait of a man with heavy cheeks and a jaunty hat, was bought by Mr. Preyer of the Hague, through Mr. Tooth, for £9000. It is said that a certain unpleasant thickness of pigment will disappear under the treatment of an expert; but as far as the look of the thing went at the moment of the sale much money was being paid for a picture that gave nobody the slightest thrill of pleasure. It was a case in which the bidding was lively, and nothing else.

We are accustomed to find the Stock Exchange more interesting than the stock. Painting is in much the same case: the picture-sales for the moment are more absorbing than the pictures. History is being made under the hammer. The dispersal of the Rembrandt drawings in Holland marks a new page in the finance of the Fine Arts. It meant a closing of doors upon the small buyer, who can no longer afford to treasure a slight drawing in the belief that, at a small price, he holds the genius of Rembrandt in his very hand. The genius of Rembrandt is almost complete in the scribbles that at one time littered the artist's studio, but the small buyer is now dispossessed; his advantages are become manifest to the class that must pay £40,000 for the genius of Rembrandt when it is expressed in oil paint. A good scribble, at the double Dutch prices of the other day, is now worth over two thousand pounds; and even the four hundred paid at Sotheby's last week for a small drawing—probably the work of eight or nine minutes—is on the new scale of costliness.

Between the two great prices—one paid, in Paris for a Rembrandt, the other in London for a Romney—there is no safe ground for comparison. The prices were the same, but nothing else. The Romney is worth forty thousand because it is pretty, which is the last reason in the world why the Rembrandt is worth forty thousand. The Rembrandt is, so to speak, real estate, the price a solid price for solid property; the Romney thousands are in the nature of a fabulous compliment to a lovely lady, but a compliment which nobody will regret paying.

THE LARGEST BUILDING OF EUROPEAN STYLE IN JAPAN.—THE CENTRAL RAILWAY STATION IN TOKIO.

This fine railway station was completed in May.

One industrious writer has worked out the total value of all existing Rembrandts on the scale of the "Bathsheba." His estimate runs into many millions. But there is a fallacy behind the valuation. "Bathsheba" is worth its money because most other Rembrandts of the same quality are valueless, from the point of view of the market.

The national collections, while the nations hold good, do not come into the reckoning; they have no value because they are out of reach—sour grapes to the buyers. One must snap one's fingers at the Botticellis of Trafalgar Square, and lay one's fortune at the feet of the random goddesses of King Street. Messrs. Duveen, when they pay their money for a picture at Christie's, are really paying as well for all the pictures held in the capacious hands of the public. It might be said that all the Rembrandts in the National Gallery and the "Bathsheba" are together worth forty thousand, but since the last is the only one that can change hands, it carries, on its own shoulders, the value of them all.

No less interesting than the big prices are the small. Sargent's panel of a Javanese dancer fetched little more than three hundred pounds at the Alma-Tadema sale. The whole atmosphere of the proceedings in Grove End Road was in conflict with the free manner of by far the most interesting of a notorious series of presentation pictures, for the most part thoroughly representative of the St. John's Wooden School. The house itself was looking at its worst; a drab crowd spoilt an illusion which needed a multitude of flowers, artificial light, and the living fame of its owner to be even mildly convincing. The illusion gone, the famous studio was no longer entrancing; but the conspicuous inscription "Ars longa, vita brevis est" became interesting for the first time since it was put in place under the silver ceiling. Most of the art of the establishment seemed already withered when it was held up to auction, and to die under the stroke of the hammer. But the "Javanese Dancer" was alive; and since Mr. Sargent's work is almost as difficult to get as Romney's, the price is one which has an extensive future. Still more recent, and interesting, was the appraisal of El Greco in Paris. Not many years ago one of the finest examples of this master of light and miracles ever taken from Spain fetched £400 in Glasgow. Ten thousand would not buy it now, for Spain has learnt how to hold her treasures.—E. M.

DEADLY HOUSE FLY. PROPOSED POPULAR CAMPAIGN AGAINST IT.

In a letter to the "Times," Professor E. H. Ross declares that it is essential that a crusade of organised fly reduction should be considered generally by health authorities as a regular health measure.

"Another step in the direction of fly reduction lies in the education of school children. If the coming generation could be taught the known facts concerning flies, their danger, the nature and fatality of the diseases conveyed by them, and the possibilities of fly reduction by regularly dealing with the breeding places or maggot lairs, then a crusade against all flies will soon become established.

"When mosquito reduction was undertaken in the Suez Canal district it was found essential to make the crusade popular and to interest the public generally in the matter. This rest the public authorities concerned soon agreed to the proposals, and the results are well known. The surest way to institute successfully a new health measure is to make that measure popular, and no new health measure can be justly popular until it is understood."

Until this and other insect pests are wholly exterminated, guard against contact with them.

How to avoid mosquito and other insect bites, and also contamination by the disease-carrying housefly.

TRY THIS SIMPLE EXPERIMENT.

Wash a plate with ordinary household or toilet Soap and observe that flies have no hesitation in settling on it. Then wash a plate with and note the difference; flies will not touch it.

The deduction is obvious and, moreover, what is shown here of the fly applies with equal or greater force to gnats, mosquitos, etc.

LADIES' PAGE.

AScot, marking the season's prime, was never more favoured than last week by the Clerk of the Weather, and never did the dress appear more fascinating. The close "line," combined as it now is with a certain degree of graceful draping, has a charming effect. Quite a large proportion of the smartest dresses had the skirt freely cut up at the ankle, so as (when properly worn) to reveal a very considerable length of limb at every step; the most fashionable position for the slit was far round to the back on the left side, so that the leg was visible chiefly to anybody behind the wearer. Of course, the ankles must be clothed most daintily; semi-transparent silk stockings of the same colour as the gown, and high-heeled shoes with coloured vamp and lacets also to match, give the best effect. Many women, however, although they order a slit-up skirt, then find that they are too bashful to show so much of their "understandings." For some undiscoverable reason, it is thought to be bold to the verge of impropriety to reveal the natural fact that woman, like her brother man, is biped; and, accordingly, the inconsequent compromise was frequently adopted of filling in the slit-up skirt with frills, or falling fragments of lace or voile, which really reduced the slit to absurdity—why cut up the tight skirt at all in such a case? The material used for either draped skirts or the tight underskirts with tunics are always of the softest and most supple order, so that, if the skirt be slit, it does not reveal the fact while the wearer stands still, as the edges of the opening fall together.

In consequence of the popularity of tunics, or over-and-under dresses, and the diaphanous fabrics employed, there was wonderful colour charm about the Ascot gowns. Lady Chesterfield, for instance, wore a dress of cherry-red satin charmeuse with a tunic of purple tulle, which was pleated, but nevertheless remained transparent, and the colour effect was delightful. Another pretty effect of the same order was an old-rose tulle as deep tunic, laid over a willow-green crêpe-de-Chine dress. A patterned silk gauze in bright emerald-purple and silver-grey made a draped skirt, and it had a flat tunic of pale-blue chiffon, with a swathed waistbelt and sash-ends of lemon-yellow weighted with purple bead cones—daring, but successful. Simple and yet effective was a white chiffon dress nearly covered by two tiers of black-lace flouncings on the skirt; there was a fichu of similar cobweb-like black lace, and then colour was admitted in a sash, with ends knotted near the knee, of brilliant brocade ribbon, gold and silver and green in the design. Brocade had a great success in the shape of the little coats, usually not much more than waist length, worn over skirts of plain silken material, usually of the softest, such as satin charmeuse or crêpe mètre, with a deep swathed belt showing at the front and with sash ends, and some white lace or chiffon for vest. Then broderie Anglaise was much worn by the younger visitors to the royal race-course; not always in white or cream, for I noted many tints. For instance, lemon-yellow, partly veiled with a yet paler shade of chiffon, and finished with a belt and sash of gold brocade gauze ribbon; and pink broderie Anglaise, with accordeon-pleated blue chiffon used as sleeves, top of the very low-cut corsage, and hem.

Small hats are quite the most in vogue, and are responsible for the appearance of an amusingly varied outcrop of beautiful parasols. So long as the huge hats of yesterday prevailed, there was not only not much necessity for carrying parasols, but they were even troublesome to use, knocking against the wide brim of the hats. But now, what is called a large hat is of comparatively modest dimensions, and by far the majority of the Ascot chapeaux were small—and not a few were likewise transparent, made wholly of black tulle, or of tulle puffed over the lightest possible foundation of silk. Accordingly, the parasol was with us again in full force, and its becomingness as a background was as much in evidence as its utility. A pagoda shape is much favoured; one such, in pale-pink brocade silk, had a pink tassel depending from every one of its points. Another, white outside, was lined with a brocade all over little pink roses. It is fashionable to embroider sunshade covers both inside and outside with silk, and outside in clusters with beads; and all sorts of dainty fabrics were seen. It is quite necessary for a good effect that the parasol shall harmonise in colour and in fabric with the hat and gown, and it is also wise to make sure that the effect of the colour on the complexion is good. One handsome parasol of bright-green silk, draped and befrilled with black lace on which pink button-roses were bestowed, was charming in itself, but the unhappy owner was forbidden by her doting husband to put it in front of her face, because it made her complexion resemble that of the Robespierre of tradition—"the sea-green one."

Harrods' annual summer sale, which lasts for one week only, will commence on Monday, July 7, and terminate on July 12, remnants being cleared at half price on Friday, July 11. Harrods' sale is a shopping event which stands alone, not only by its short duration, but because it comprises only the surplus of Harrods' high-class stocks, no job lines being specially purchased for the event. The bargains are immensely varied, embracing as they do the fashions and wares in one hundred departments. My readers can obtain illustrated catalogues by applying, and should pay this sale an early visit.

There is nothing relieves the sense of oppression on a hot day so well as the use of a good perfume, which should be pleasant and refreshing when used, remain sweet and not get stale and sickly, and not be vulgarly obtrusive and "catchy." An ideal perfume answering to this description is "Shem-el-Nessim," the Scent of Araby, suggesting a delightful garden of flowers. It has the added advantage that a complete toilet service can be obtained, all with the same delicious perfume—a scent for the handkerchief, soap, bath salts, hair lotion, toilet water, face powder, brilliantine, sachet, and cachous. The soap is ideal, while a tepid or hot bath, to which has been added the "Shem-el-Nessim" bath salts, is a luxury indeed. These preparations are made by Messrs. J. Grossmith and Son, Newgate Street, and sold by all chemists. FILOMENA.

too often find that their favourite selections will not bear reproduction by any single-toned instrument, such as the piano—that the very charm of the music lies in its symphonic effects. NEW NOVELS.

"Leila and Her Lover." Mr. Max Pemberton's new plot would be astonishing if his record had not already steered us against surprises—a Pemberton novel is never without good measure of the romance and mystery of the bookstalls. Subtleties of character do not trouble Mr. Pemberton, and his heroines are coloured too much after the fashion of a grocer's almanac to suit the fastidious; but then the fastidious will always be in the minority, and the people who want an hour's pleasant excitement like to know where they may be sure of finding it. To them we commend "Leila and Her Lover" (Ward, Lock), which is a fine, full-bodied story about a lovely lady and a baronet, with a steam yacht and a wicked peer providing the appropriate background. Mr. Pemberton's trial scene does the highest credit to his imagination, and something less than justice to the administration of the law in this country, and it is perhaps lucky for him that none of his readers are likely to trouble themselves much about its probabilities. It is all very thrilling, and things not unlike it are often reported in the halfpenny Press, when

ENGAGED IN REPELLING AN ATTACK: THE ARMoured TRAIN OUTSIDE THE ENTRENCHED CAMP AT THE IMPERIAL SERVICES EXHIBITION.

"A Summer Quadrille." Mrs. Hugh Fraser and her son are to be congratulated on the picturesque setting of "A Summer Quadrille" (Hutchinson). This pretty costume tale takes place in rural France, and presumably about the end of the seventeenth century; and the Vicomte and the Marquis play their familiar parts with a simplicity that disarms our criticism. Héloïse, the aristocratic maiden who was entrapped by the bold, bad Marquis into a false marriage, is rescued from his clutches in the nick of time, so that all ends happily; and we hope the passionate love-scene in the wood, with secret witnesses as thick as blackberries among the bushes, will not meet the eye of a reader with an inconvenient sense of humour. Men were gay and gaudy and wicked in those young reporters, as acute as Mr. Pemberton in gauging the public taste, are allowed to translate the dreary daily round into topical romance.

days; but we rather doubt if young women were quite as delightfully artless as Mr. and Mrs. Fraser ask us to believe. Montaigne, if we remember rightly, arguing from human nature, had his doubts—but then, Montaigne was a worldly philosopher, and not a modern novelist in very proper favour at the libraries.

"Unpath'd Waters."

The awkward title of "Unpath'd Waters" (The Bodley Head) covers a collection of stories and sketches by Mr. Frank Harris, who has scarcely yet, we think, come into his own. This book ought to settle his place among the young writers. It is admirably written, full of original thought and quaint fancies, and flavoured with a most stimulating cynicism. Mr. Harris's ideas are his own, that is plain: he writes that he feels and sees, and not for one moment the thing that the public might desire him to see and feel. This does not, of course, make for easy popularity; but it sets him up as quite an authority on shams, their method, and their exposure. There is a study of the philosophy of the successful Jew that is a little masterpiece of critical analysis. There is a story of the making of a saint where the cynic almost gets the better of the artist; and there is another story of a holy man, after Tolstoy, where the artist is a long way ahead of the cynic. "Unpath'd Waters" is a

WHITEWAY'S CYDER

The Ideal Summer Drink.

The first time you taste "Whiteway's" you will find it difficult to realise that you can obtain so good a wine for so little money. You will, however, appreciate that "Whiteway's" differs in many respects from ordinary Cyder—you will find that it compares to advantage with good imported wines, which are offered at a higher price mostly because the importer has to pay a high "duty" and heavy shipment charges, which do not add one penny's worth of quality to the wine. This is a fact worth making a mental note of.

"Whiteway's Cyders" may be obtained from leading Wine Merchants, Stores, and Licensed Grocers, both "Sparkling" and "Still." "Sweet" and "Dry," at from 4/- per doz. Champagne pints upwards, and 7/6 per doz. Champagne quarts upwards.

Draught Cyders in convenient size casks for family use also supplied. CURE FOR ASTHMA

'How I Fooled the Beauty Doctors. Removed All Wrinkles Over-Night.'

After Plasters, Creams and Appliances, Steaming Pots, Massage, Prescriptions, Apparatus, and All Advertised Methods Had Absolutely Failed.

A Remarkable Interview with Mme. Lawton, who for the first time reveals to Illustrated London News Readers Full Particulars of her Recent Discovery. Nothing Like It Was Ever Used or Even Heard of Before.

By BLANCHE GORDON.

It has remained for a woman unskilled in scientific research to solve, quite by accident, the problem that has baffled all science and the entire medical profession the world over. In a recent interview, Mme. Lawton explained to the writer why no one need patronise expensive Beauty specialists now, for any woman can easily accomplish in clear, and smooth as a young child's. Mme. Lawton found a way to tighten the loose, sagging, wrinkled skin, and to build up firm, healthy tissue underneath where the wrinkles were, so the skin rested on an even surface and became virtually wrinkle-proof. Now, after nearly two months, I saw with my own eyes the face of smooth delicate contour, the beautiful velvet skin and complexion like a rose, where formerly were the deep lines and furrows that added twenty years to her age.

To describe the methods here in full detail would somewhat over-run the space allotted to me for this article, but Mme. Lawton planned that a perfect deluge of requests for information had descended upon her, and many of the inquiries are from her acquaintances; but to personally write a satisfactory answer to everyone would be quite impossible, so she hit upon the clever plan of fully describing her method in a small booklet. A limited number of these, the first to be printed, had just arrived, and after much persuasion I was fortunately able to arrange with Mme. Lawton to send one of these attractive booklets, while they last, absolutely free of cost, to any readers sufficiently interested to write her and enclose two penny stamps for posting expenses.

Mme. Lawton described with deep feeling the sadness with which she thus viewed the passing of her own youth, and said it was the most bitterly tragic period of her whole life. She was able to afford any expense, so could command the services of the best specialists in the land, and she frantically tried massage, which stretched the skin still more, electrical treatments that were torture, medicines that made her ill, suction cups, masks, irritating lotions and worthless advertised methods galore. After wasting a fortune in this way, however, she was compelled to give up in absolute despair.

Imagine, then, her ecstasies of joy and delight, the indescribable relief that filled her soul to overflowing when, quite by accident, she one day discovered an almost incredibly simple process, involving a totally new scientific principle, which quickly banished every trace of line or wrinkle from her face. Light lines and cross-veins disappeared within an hour, in a single night the deepest creases were gone, and in less than a week her face was soft, in a small booklet. A limited number of these, the first to be printed, had just arrived, and after much persuasion I was fortunately able to arrange with Mme. Lawton to send one of these attractive booklets, while they last, absolutely free of cost, to any readers sufficiently interested to write her and enclose two penny stamps for posting expenses.

Mme. Lawton refused to accept the slightest payment for her trouble, saying she has explained the method to many of her friends, from whom she showed me letters proving they had all used it with wonderful success, and as it now appears to be practically infallible, she welcomes this opportunity to show her gratitude by giving the secret to Illustrated London News readers. Simply address Mme. Lawton (16A), 197, Regent Street, London, W., and I advise writing promptly, as the supply of booklets is limited, and the offer expires in thirty days owing to the amount of trouble and work involved. Nevertheless, I consider it very kind and generous of her to subject herself to the inconvenience, even for a short period, especially when we consider that she makes no charge whatever for the booklet. The supply is estimated to last thirty days, but if you are delayed in writing and no booklets remain when your letter arrives, the postage will be returned to you. This arrangement has been made for the special benefit of Illustrated London News readers only, and this article should be mentioned in your letter as evidence that you are entitled to receive the information.

THE CHRONICLE OF THE CAR.

A "Motor Derby." A very interesting suggestion is made by a writer in the current issue of the Automotor Journal, which takes the shape of a proposal for a "Motor Derby." His idea, apparently, is that something more than happens at present is needed to sustain the interest in automobilism as a sport, and, further, that more strenuous racing is necessary for the development of the motor-car as a machine. With the abstract idea I am in the heartiest agreement, as my writings will bear me witness. I do not like to think of motoring falling to the dead level of a simple method of locomotion, which it seems destined to do in the very near future unless some means can be found of enlivening its sporting side. The last hope of a race in the Isle of Man seems to have disappeared, so far as this year at least is concluded "Motor Derby" can be materialised to re-awaken the interest.

It is a pity that the writer of the article in question does not come along with some constructive idea for his "Motor Derby." He simply contents himself with elaborating the principle that such an event would be for the good of automobilism, and more or less lets it go at that. He does speak of a long-distance race at Brooklands, though he is not at all clear that this is what he really advocates. I hope it is not, for I myself cannot see any great and general interest being taken in a five hundred miles' track race. As a spectacle it is simply deadly dull, while I cannot admit that it has much value from the development point of view. Brooklands as a testing and training ground is excellent, but the "Standard Car" races have demonstrated how little value is to be attached to long-distance racing on the track.

To develop the motor vehicle there is nothing like road-racing, which brings out every quality of strength and weakness of the car. I know it is argued that racing has served its purpose, and that there is nothing more to be learned from it. But that is the veriest nonsense—it amounts to arguing that the car is perfect. As the writer in the Auto, indeed, points out, for every sovereign's worth of petrol poured into the tank, about a half-crown's worth is delivered at the road wheels, so far from perfection are we in this respect. Racing or no racing, we cannot expect ever to get our full money's-worth, but we can surely obtain more than an eighth of it, particularly by the aid of road-racing. I anticipate that the article will lead to a good deal of useful discussion, and if it does it will at least have served a good purpose, even though it has very little constructive value.

The 25-h.p. Vauxhall.

During a recent week-end I had an opportunity of trying the latest model of 25-h.p. Vauxhall, a car which has done exceedingly well in competitions and in the hands of concerned. Brooklands flourishes, it is true, and we have seen a recrudescence of hill-climbs this year: but, nevertheless, the writing is visible on the wall, and I can see very little future for the sport, unless something like the private users, as the records are there to show. One car is so much like another nowadays that it is really difficult to become enthusiastic about any of them, except that now and then you chance upon one which has some outstanding merit, differentiating it from the rest, and then you feel some justification for praising its performance in rather greater measure than usual. I know I am not going too far in saying that the new Vauxhall is one of those cars which give the impression of being just that little ahead of its nearest competitors which makes all the difference. It is a little faster, a little better hill-climber—though I am not sure that this latter quality is given justice by thus qualifying it, though it may be allowed to pass—and a little in advance generally of others in the same class for power and price that have come under my hands.

A CAR THAT HAS DONE OVER 12,000 MILES OVER PRIMITIVE ROADS: A 24-30 H.P. WOLSELEY IN CEYLON.

During the week-end I had ample opportunity of putting the Vauxhall through its paces, for I took the car down into one of the hilliest parts of Kent, with a view to seeing what it could do on severe gradients. I do not go about in search of freak hills—I don't believe in them at

Important Notice to Skin Sufferers

Antexema

cures every Skin Illness

The only way you can convince yourself that Antexema actually does stop skin-suffering the moment it is used, is by using it. That is the most conclusive of all arguments. The instant you apply Antexema the horrible and incessant irritation stops. The rash, eruption or eczema that annoys you every time you see your face in the mirror begins to go away. No longer will you be distressed when anyone looks at you. There will be no more torture by day, or sleeplessness at night, but you will enjoy perfect ease and comfort the livelong day, and your skin will soon be absolutely free from blemish. Get Antexema to-day and prove it.

No more Eczema, Rashes, or Face Spots

W. B. R., of Leicester, writes:—"After having three bottles of Antexema my boy of ten months is completely cured of eczema. When three months old he broke out all over head and face with that terrible complaint. We tried various remedies, but he got worse, took him to a skin doctor, but obtained no relief, and then used Antexema. The first application had a soothing effect, and in three weeks he was cured."

Whatever your skin illness, Antexema will conquer it. Eczema, rashes, bad legs, face spots, insect bites, bad hands, and every sore, irritated, broken, inflamed or pimply skin condition is cured by Antexema. You can't use it too soon. The moment your skin becomes unhealthy is the time to use Antexema. That's the way to avoid needless suffering. Antexema is neither an ointment nor a quack nostrum, but a physician's remedy. It is invisible on the skin, and works wonders in every skin complaint.

No More Ugly Ears

Why allow your child to be annoyed in later life by outstanding ears, when you can easily prevent it now? Get the Claxton Ear-Cap, and let it be worn in the nursery and during sleep, and any tendency to ugly ears will soon be corrected. The pressure exerted is imperceptible, but thoroughly effective, and the cartilages of the ear are gently moulded while they are pliable, and beautiful, well-placed ears in adult life are thus ensured. In addition, the Claxton Ear-Cap prevents the hair tangling during sleep, and causes the child to breathe through the nose instead of the mouth, which is so common a cause in chest and throat troubles. Patronised by the nobility, gentry and medical profession. The at some point there is a new way is how a car that I am likely to find something of the ordinary touring, and I of thing over which I shall. To say that the car runs out the country is the best way to describe its hill-climbing performances. On River Hill, for example, I changed down to "third," and, the surface being rather greasy and the car being shod with plain tyres, I had to throttle down at the bends, because I was afraid of skidding through taking them too fast. If anyone wants more than that, he had better wait until some new discoveries in motor-engineering are made. Altogether a delightful car to drive, and one with a huge reserve of power, is this new Vauxhall.

The 9.5-h.p. Standard Car. The other day I tested one of the new 9.5-h.p. Standard cars, the latest production of the Standard Motor Company, of Coventry. Truth to tell, I had expected to find something of the cycle-car type, but I was agreeably surprised to find that the little Standard is a really able car. It has every constructional feature of its larger sisters, while its running is quite a revelation of what can be done on small dimensions. I was so interested in

A SEVERE TEST OF DURABILITY: A 17.25-H.P. ARMSTRONG-WHITWORTH STANDARD CAR AT THE FOOT OF LAS ZORRAS HILL, CHILLI.

The hill, which is two miles long, is a mass of stone, sand, and holes. Though the car is driven on it several times a day, the engine has never failed, nor is there a crack or strain in the panels or anywhere.

factory. It is very fast for its size—I touched a speed of thirty-five miles an hour with it, and there was more to come if the road had favoured high speed; while the motor ran with absolute smoothness, and there was not the slightest objectionable vibration about the car. It is a splendid little hill-climber, quiet and very flexible—in fact, all that such a car should be. It sells—complete with hood, screen, horn, full outfit of lamps, tools, etc.—at the very small figure of £180, so that it competes on a price basis with the representatives of the "American Invasion," whom it has beaten in the matter of efficiency, smoothness of running at high speed, and constructional excellence.

Talbot at Caerphilly.

Talbot cars met with extraordinary success in the Caerphilly open hill-climb, the South Wales A.C. on June 19, winning cups, four gold medals and two other awards in the four events in which they competed. In these four events Talbot finished first on formula in every one, also making fastest time in two, and second fastest in the remaining two. Following their wins at Aston, Shelsley Walsh and Stile Cop, this makes four important hill-climbs in succession in which Talbots have carried off the honours of the day.

A Correction.

In recording the results of the recent Shelsley Walsh hill-climb, I stated that the 25-n.p. Talbot made fastest time of the day and set up a new record for the hill. Apparently, this record only stood for a very few minutes, for it was immediately beaten by Mr. Higgins, driving one of the new 30-98-h.p. Vauxhalls, who materially reduced the Talbot time. I can only say that the information gave was wired to me in the same faith in which I accepted it.

PURGEN

MISCELLANEOUS.

WITH reference to the page in our Summer Number (June 7) illustrating the use of egrets' and other birds' plumage in fashionable millinery, we have received a very interesting letter from a correspondent who is connected with the trade. We should like to point out that the figures we gave were quoted from a recent speech by Earl Curzon. "In the first place," our correspondent writes, "it would be impossible for anyone to get at the number of egrets that were offered for public sale in London in 1911, as seven-eighths of the feathers are collected by the natives after the birds have moulted, and it is the source of living for hundreds of families. As regards birds of paradise, the male birds are only killed when they have obtained their full plumage, which is when they are three years old; and as the female birds are no good, and are, therefore, not shot by the hunters, there is no fear, that I can see, of these birds ever getting less. Then again, a large quantity of the plumage of birds which are shipped is taken from birds which are killed for eating, the same as our pheasants are shot here and the tails used for trimming ladies' hats. Again, the tanagers are killed by the owners of the orange groves to save their oranges. These birds go from one fruit to the other sticking their beaks into the oranges, and when these are shipped it is not only the one that has a hole in it that goes bad, but it causes several which are packed round it to do likewise. There is a law in India to stop people killing parrots, but they are killed just the same by the owners of the rice-fields, and are allowed to lie on the ground and rot. It is a pity that people who write these things and state these cases before Parliament do not know more what they are talking about. A bird which is likely to become extinct is not of any use to Mincing Lane, as the dealers who purchase them, should the fashion be taken up of any particular kind, want to buy thousands at a time, and a rare bird, therefore, is of no use to us. If the Bill which is now before Parliament were to pass, I do not think it would save the life of a single bird, as they would be shipped just the same to other countries, and it would simply mean throwing out of employment thousands of hands who are employed in this country in manufacturing the feather ornaments."

Mme. Chaminade, the eminent French composer, received a most enthusiastic welcome at Æolian Hall the other day, when she took part in pianoforte duets of her own composition, the other part being played by means of the Pianola. The Pianola was also used to play several of Mme. Chaminade's most famous compositions, and to accompany the admirable singing of Miss Mary Leighton. Although it is now no novelty for the Pianola to be used in the concert-hall, in association with the most distinguished musicians, the highly artistic character of the selections in which the Pianola took part on this occasion showed this instrument's powers to such unmistakable advantage that great applause was evoked from the large audience present.

Considerably reduced prices are announced this week for Dunlop motor tyres, a new price list of which has been issued by the Dunlop Rubber Company, Ltd., of Aston Cross, Birmingham.

We learn that the South Eastern and Chatham Railway's new Continental express will leave Charing Cross at 4.30 p.m. from July 1, and will serve Paris every weekday, via Dover and Calais, until Oct. 31; Bâle, until Sept. 30, and Tuesdays and Saturdays in October; Martigny-les-Bains, Contrexéville, and Vittel every Tuesday and Friday in July, August, and September; and Boulogne, Dannes-Camiers (for Ste. Cécile Plage) and Etaples (for Le Touquet and Paris Plage) every Friday from July 11 to Sept. 12. The ordinary afternoon service via Boulogne and Ostend will, from July 1, leave Charing Cross at 2.5 p.m. instead of at 2.20 p.m.

Some who would otherwise use a camera are deterred by the idea that its use is troublesome, the percentages of failures heavy, and the after-processes messy. Such objections were all of them very true a few years back, but those inconveniences are little more than legends now. With a camera such as the new Tenax, just being introduced by the well-known optical house of Goerz (1-6, Holborn Circus, E.C.), it is difficult to see how the working can be much more simplified—a pressure of a button to open the camera, the drawing out of the front, the pressure of a small trigger on the shutter and the picture is taken—not a very formidable list! The Tenax are not only simple, but they are small and well made. The after-processes are much simpler than they were, and if the photographer wishes to avoid the slight trouble which they entail, the work is done by dealers at a trivial cost.

When a Woman's Back Aches

When she has dizzy spells and bearing-down pains, and feels

It is a warning that the kidneys are not doing their duty—they are leaving kidney poisons in the blood, and these poisons are spreading disease to all parts of the system.

Dropsy, stone, inflammation of the bladder, and urinary stoppage, as well as rheumatism, lumbago and sciatica, arise from the same cause.

But don't grow disheartened. Kidney trouble is curable if treatment is begun in time. It is only when neglected that kidney complaints become so difficult—perhaps impossible—to cure.

Doan's Backache Kidney Pills are solely for the kidneys and urinary system. They do what laxative medicines cannot do; they help the kidneys to filter the blood and throw off kidney poisons before they can settle in the system and cause mischief.

A Kingston resident tells here how Doan's Backache Kidney Pills help—speaks to you from personal experience.

It is just such honest, heartfelt testimony as this that has established so much confidence in Doan's Backache Kidney Pills throughout the world.

Read this proof:—

"Shortly after the birth of one of my children," says Mrs. E. Stimpson, of 1, Acre Road, Richmond Road, Kingston-on-Thames, "symptoms of kidney weakness appeared, and for five years afterwards I was ill. I was almost bent double with cruel pains in my back; they made me scream out, they were so sharp. I could not stoop without my back paining me."

"Some days the kidneys acted too often, and with great pain; at other times there was barely any action, and water would collect in my legs and ankles."

"I was troubled with headaches, giddiness and palpitation; I felt tired, drowsy, and fit for nothing, yet when I laid down I could not get off to sleep."

"After suffering all those years I began to feel I should never get better again, but one of my relatives, who had had ten stones removed by Doan's Backache Kidney Pills, strongly advised me to try the medicine, and soon after I did so the kidneys began to act naturally and without pain. My back became comfortable, the dropsical swellings disappeared, and I lost that miserable, tired, drowsy feeling. Soon I completely recovered, and—better still—I have kept well ever since.—(Signed) E. STIMPSON."
